Epic trance, also known as uplifting or anthem trance, is a subgenre of trance music that emerged in the late 1990s. It's characterized by euphoric melodies, profound synthetic strings, and captivating atmospheres, often boasting a tempo between 135-150 beats per minute. The music's structure builds steadily, creating an emotional journey that culminates in a rousing, energetic climax.

The journey typically starts with a slow, atmospheric introduction, gradually progressing into a powerful driving beat. Then comes the breakdown, which often features melodic themes or dreamy vocal elements, providing an introspective pause in the otherwise high-energy progression. The climax, or "drop", features the melody at its most powerful, often backed by soaring synths, creating a moment of intense emotional release.

Epic Trance is popular in nightclubs, music festivals, and has also found a home on online music platforms. Major figures in the genre include Armin van Buuren, Paul van Dyk, and Above & Beyond, all of whom have contributed to the genre's global popularity and evolution.
