Trance is an electronic dance music genre that emerged in the early 1990s. Characterized by its hypnotic rhythms and melodic elements, trance music typically features a tempo ranging from 125 to 150 beats per minute. The genre often includes repetitive synthesizer phrases, a prominent bassline, and build-ups followed by breakdowns, creating an ebb and flow that captivates listeners and induces a state of trance-like euphoria.

Trance music originated in Germany and quickly spread across Europe, becoming a staple in the rave and club scenes. Pioneering artists like Paul van Dyk, Tiësto, and Armin van Buuren played significant roles in shaping and popularizing the genre. Tracks like "For an Angel" by Paul van Dyk and "Adagio for Strings" by Tiësto are iconic within the trance community.

Subgenres of trance include uplifting trance, known for its euphoric and positive vibe; progressive trance, which incorporates elements of house music. Festivals like A State of Trance and Dreamstate celebrate the genre, drawing massive crowds of dedicated fans.

Trance continues to evolve, influencing and blending with other electronic genres, yet it remains a distinct and beloved form of dance music known for its emotional depth and ability to transport listeners into a state of bliss.
